Essentially there was no distinction between the individual conscience and the collective conscience. As Italian humanist ideas spread abroad, they carried with them, as Johan Nordstroem put it, Italian notions about the importance and superiority of Italian civilization, and a disdainful attitude regarding "barbarians" who lived beyond the Alps. The result of appropriating such Italian ideas may be termed

"displacedness," a geographical sense of national inferiority parallel to the historical sense of belatedness. In assessing the social implications of fear, however, several points need to be considered. Views Read View source View history. Philosophyofscience.Weknowwe.Benchmarking in der Automobilindustrie.
